Living with a Dual Diagnosis: Down Syndrome & Alzheimer's Disease

Individuals living with Down Syndrome are living longer, and with that come age related challenges such as physical and cognitive declines. Successful aging is important for everyone, but it is essential for those living with a dual diagnosis of Down Syndrome and Alzheimer's Disease.

This session will focus on educating about this dual diagnosis, understanding the importance of a "base line" evaluation, and helpful guidance to support families and adults living with Down Syndrome and Dementia.

After attending this course participants will be able to:

- Give examples of some age related challenges that some individuals living with dual diagnosis may exhibit.
- Identify why a "base line" evaluation is essential for young people.
- Give examples of best practices when working with an individual living with this dual diagnosis.
- List resources for more information for you, your families, and professionals in your organization.
